Key Judgments

Official foreign assets of the OPEC countries increased by $26.9 billion during 1976, growing from $105.3 billion at yearend 1975 to $132.2 billion at yearend 1976. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait accounted for more than half of the increase. Nigeria and Venezuela experienced declines in their reserves.

OPEC's portfolio continued to shift toward longer term, higher yield assets. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait in particular sought to increase rates of return on their assets by investing heavily in longer term government and corporate issues.

The $26.9 billion increase in the value of OPEC members' foreign holdings fell $12.8 billion short of their combined current account surplus. The difference was largely the result of:

- A sharp rise in receivables from the oil companies due to increasing oil sales and the two- to three-month lag between liftings and payments.
- Net repayments of debt by the OPEC countries.
- Private investment abroad.

OPEC Countries: Size and Distribution of Official Foreign Assets on 31 December 1976

Developments in 1976

Foreign official assets of OPEC member countries increased $26.9 billion during 1976, bringing total holdings at yearend to $132 billion (tables 1 and 2). A $10.4 billion increase in Saudi Arabia's holdings accounted for nearly 40 percent of the rise. Kuwait, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates also posted large gains in foreign holdings last year.

Owing in part to the strengthening of oil demand in 1976, nearly all OPEC members shared in the reserve increase. Algeria, Libya, Iraq, Indonesia, and Ecuador, which experienced reserve declines in 1975, all boosted their holdings last year. Two countries—Nigeria and Venezuela—had to dip into reserves in 1976.

About 85 percent of OPEC's 1976 investments went into medium- and long-term assets, including substantial investments in equities and corporate fixed-interest issues. The share of OPEC funds going into bank deposits declined from 31 percent in 1975 to 17 percent in 1976. The decline reflects mainly a reduction in the use of short-term deposits. Many OPEC members formerly used such deposits as a vehicle for investing surplus funds without having to make difficult investment decisions.

OPEC asset holdings in the US increased by $7.5 billion during 1976—30 percent of the total rise in OPEC's foreign holdings. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait together added $8.3 billion to their holdings in the US. Nigeria and Venezuela drew down their US balances last year by nearly $2 billion. OPEC members placed about 45 percent of their 1976 investments in continental Europe, mainly in Eurodollar deposits.

*OPEC foreign official assets are assumed to remain in the country where they are initially placed until removed by the original investor. Some OPEC funds managed by US financial institutions, for example, are invested in non-US securities; no attempt is made to determine whether the non-US security was purchased from another US holder or from a non-US resident.

The OPEC countries reduced the pace of their investments in international organizations last year. Owing to the relatively poor yields offered by World Bank bonds, OPEC members put less than $500 million in these issues in 1976, compared with slightly over $1 billion in 1975. The end in early 1976 of the borrowing phase of the International Monetary Fund's oil facility resulted in a decline in the flow of OPEC funds to the IMF.

Currency Denomination

OPEC members placed roughly $22 billion of their 1976 investments in dollar-denominated assets. Their holdings of sterling-denominated assets fell by $2.8 billion last year because of a continuing sell off of these assets and an $800 million decline in the dollar value of their remaining sterling portfolio. Investment in continental hard currencies picked up moderately in 1976, in part because of the increased level of equity purchases.

Profile of Official Foreign Assets,
31 December 1976Concentrations*

Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, and the UAE accounted for the bulk of the OPEC countries' $132 billion official assets at yearend 1976.

- Saudi Arabia alone held $49 billion in foreign official assets—nearly two-fifths of total OPEC holdings.

- Kuwait, the UAE, and Qatar accounted for about another third of OPEC foreign wealth.

Type

At yearend 1976, OPEC countries held about equal amounts of short-term assets,

- Bank deposits accounted for about 40 percent of total assets.
- Nearly 30 percent was held in government securities, including $13.8 billion in US Government and US agency issues.
- Gold and holdings in the International Monetary Fund accounted for about 5 percent of OPEC foreign wealth.
- Nearly 25 percent of OPEC holdings were in other assets, including more than 8 percent in corporate securities held primarily by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

Location

OPEC wealth was predominantly located in the major developed countries (table 7).

- London accounted for about one-fourth of the total, most of which was in Eurocurrency bank deposits. Iran, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, and the Persian Gulf sheikhdoms accounted for more than 85 percent of OPEC investment located in the United Kingdom.

¹ Foreign official assets totaled $132 billion on 31 December 1976. Data rounded to nearest 5 percent.

- About one-fourth of OPEC assets were held in the United States, more than one-half consisted of US Government and US agency securities owned primarily by Saudi Arabia.

- Less than 10 percent was held by the IMF and World Bank.

- Only about 1 percent was located in Communist countries, primarily held by Iraq.

- The remaining 14 percent was spread among a number of countries including those in the Middle East.

Currency Composition

The great bulk of OPEC foreign wealth was invested in dollar-denominated assets at yearend 1976 (table 8).

- Dollar-denominated assets accounted for more than three-quarters of the total. Only Iraq, Gabon, and Nigeria held less than 50 percent of their foreign wealth in dollars.

- Sterling accounted for less than 5 percent of OPEC wealth at yearend 1976. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and Nigeria held nearly all of the sterling assets.

¹ Foreign official assets totaled $132 billion on 31 December 1976. Data are rounded to nearest 5 percent.

- About 15 percent of OPEC wealth was denominated in other currencies, primarily German marks, yen, French and Swiss francs, and Canadian dollars.
- Gold and IMF assets accounted for about 5 percent.

Reconciliation of the Change in Assets with the OPEC Current Account Surplus

OPEC countries' foreign exchange receipts totaled $44.4 billion during 1976, including the current account surplus of $39.7 billion and $4.7 billion in gross foreign borrowing (table 9). The $17.5 billion difference between OPEC members' receipts and the $26.9 billion rise in their foreign assets is accounted for by the following items:

Change in credits to oil companies. Oil company indebtedness to the OPEC countries rose by $7.5 billion during 1976 to $20.6 billion at yearend. This resulted from (a) a rise in oil liftings following increased world demand and (b) the continuation of the two- to three-month lag between shipments and payments for oil.

Debt repayment. OPEC countries repaid $2.9 billion of their outstanding debt in 1976.

¹ Including net private investment other than in US and UK bank deposits.

Algeria, Indonesia, and Iran accounted for nearly 85 percent of payments.

Nationalization compensation. Nigeria made payments of $350 million, and Venezuelan payments totaled more than $500 million in 1976.

Net private investment in the United States and the United Kingdom. This category consisted of an increase in private investment in the United States of $1.6 billion and an increase in private bank deposits in the United Kingdom of $900 million.

Adjustments for changes in foreign exchange. OPEC lost an estimated $200 million in the dollar value of those OPEC assets denominated in currencies other than the dollar.

Prepayment to United States for Imports. OPEC countries increased military prepayments by $2.9 billion in 1976. Liabilities to OPEC countries reported by non-banking concerns in the United States grew by about $400 million.

Errors and omissions. This category, including private investment other than in the US or in UK bank deposits, accounted for the remaining $3.5 billion.
